

LOYALTY SCARCE IN MEXICAN ARMY

Follower of President of Southern Country Thinks Himself Lucky to Get Away. American Soldier Different.

BY A MILITARY EXPERT.
WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—"How does the Mexican soldier compare with the American soldier?"

I can best show you how they compare by noting that in which they are most different, the thing which makes a man with a gun a soldier!

An American soldier who deserts in the face of the enemy knows he is a coward; his former comrades loathe his cowardice; and he himself never forgets his broken oath.

But the poor, conscripted Mexican peon carrying his government's arms doesn't think much of a broken oath. He deserts when the fire is hottest and at the very first possible chance. He doesn't look upon himself as a coward. He pats himself on the back for being lucky enough to get away!

It is so common just now for large bunches of the federalists to desert to the rebel side that it passes without comment.

The federal army is made up of the rubbish of the republic, convicts, looters, notorious "bad men." It has long been customary for Mexican judges to sentence men to the army instead of the jail. Raids are made on low down saloons and brothels and drink-sodden recruits are forced into the ranks.

The Mexican soldier is content to remain in the army after being once forced in, because army life is made more agreeable to him than his past, half-starved, half-clothed condition. He is allowed to take along his wife or woman—they pay little attention to private morals—and little drilling is indulged in.

Huerta, than whom none knows the Mexican soldier better, has seen to it that the soldier is paid regularly. He gets his uniform and from $1.50 to $2 Mexican money a day; and a chance to do some looting—the dead are always robbed.

The government furnishes no food; that being the women's duty. Often in a battle men will drop in their tracks from hunger. There are no hospital arrangements for the injured.

The Mexican private will fight and fight hard at times, generally when he is cornered and has no choice.

So much for the men, now about the officers.

Just outside Mexico City the government has a military academy where many young officers are educated in the latest and best methods of warfare. They leave that school with high military ideals.

Once in the army, the youthful lieutenant learns that his superior officers are not in the business for glory or country, but for graft.

For instance, there is Gen. Trucey Albert, who with a staff of thousands of men, has been trying his best to avoid battling with the Carranzistas. But during all these weeks when he was supposed to be doing his best to defeat the rebels he was pocketing half the salaries of his men and subordinate officers and was raking in the profit on all beer sold at 80 cents a bottle.

As for the rebel soldier.

Many of them are bandits, always were and always will be. They will probably be in rebellion against Carranza six months after he ousts Huerta. They are in Carranza's ranks because the chances for gratifying their desires are better there.

ANOTHER GRANT GOES TO FRONT

Chapman Grant, Grandson of Former President, Expected to be Sent to Mexican Border in December.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—Chapman Grant, a grandson of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, has resigned a position in the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Science, to become a soldier. Early in December he will leave for Texas to become second lieutenant in the Fourteenth United States cavalry.

Discussing his resignation, Grant said his decision to join the army at this time, had been prompted by a possibility that he would see active service in Mexico. The Fourteenth is doing duty along the Mexican border.

"I merely thought that there might be a war," said the youth, the son of Jesse R. Grant, youngest son of the late general and president. "If there should be a war, I wanted to be in it. I suppose this business of becoming a soldier might become a family matter, and that it is a natural thing to expect of me. But as far as the matter of my appointment at this particular time goes, I have no inside information as to the likelihood of war. In a way, I am taking a chance on it. But I guess I would have gone into the army any way, war or no war."

Chapman Grant was graduated from Williams' college in 1910. He has been curator of entomology at the Children's Museum of the Brooklyn Institute since Sept. 1. He received his commission as second lieutenant as a successful competitor in examinations last July for the appointment of civilians to the army.
